SALMONELLOSIS

It is estimated that each year over 2 million people in the United States–or one person out of 100–suffer from salmonellosis.

Though often mistaken for a 24-hour virus because of similar symptons-headache, fever, stomach cramps, diarrhea, and vomiting–salmonellosis is an infection of the stomach and intestines that is caused by salmonella bacteria which are sometimes present in such foods as fresh poultry, meat, and fish.

According to the U. S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) and the U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare–two federal departments that deal with the salmonella problem–salmonellosis can also be transmitted from pets, such as turtles, to humans. In other words, your children can catch salmonellosis by playing with someone's pet turtle.

The disease generally lasts from 1 to 5 days. Although it is rarely fatal, it can be dangerous to the very young, the very old, and people already weakened by illness.

To curb the possible spread of salmonella bacteria at home, USDA recommends the following precautions:

Assume that uncooked poultry, meat, and seafood may contail salmonella bacteria. Since thorough cooking kills these bacteria, USDA recommends cooking foods in the home to 155°F. Obviously, avoid eating raw fish, meat, poultry or eggs.

Although cooking kills salmonella germs, using the same platters and utensils before and after cooking can recontaminate the food with salmonella.

To safeguard against cross contamination, wash hands, kitchen counter space, utensils, dishes, and cutting boards after contact with raw meat. Concerning cutting boards, it is recommended that one board be used only for preparing meats and another be used for cutting vegetables, cheese, and other foods.

When thawing meat in the refrigerator, keep it away from all other food and preferably, in the meat keeper. Blood from raw poultry and meat can be contaminated with salmonella and can, in turn, contaminate any foods with which it comes in contact.

After cooking, do not allow meat or poultry to stand a long time at room temperature. Bacteria grow well under these conditions, and can recontaminate the food.

Be on guard for the symptons of salmonella infection in pets. If a pet is having stomach problems, keep its feeding dishes, toys, bedding, and similar items away from sources in contact with the family's food, such as the kitchen sink, drainboard, and food service utensils. Always wash your hands after handling a sick pet.

Because hearing loss victims usually experience no pain with their loss in hearing ability, it is not unusal for a hearing handicapped individual to remain unaware of his hearing problem until the hearing loss becomes so serious it impedes his normal communication with loved ones at home and associates at work.

School Names Mrs. Gibson Associate Teacher

The international Yamaha Music School organization is pleased to announce that Mrs. Karen Gibson has been named an Associate Teacher. Mrs. Gibson will conduct classes in the Appomattox area for children ages four to eight.

The Yamaha Music School Course offers a researched and tested curriculum for the teaching of music fundamentals to children in the early years. About 25 years ago, the Yamaha Foundation of Tokyo called upon some of the world's leading pediatricians, musicians, educators and psychologists to research and develop a broadly based new concept for the teaching of music. What these specialists found was that children develop their fundamental responses to music much earlier than was supposed. The optimum time for building a lifetime foundation of musical understanding and enjoyment is between the ages of 4 and 8! And so the Yamaha Music Schools were established with a curriculum designed to teach the basic principles of rhythm, melody, harmony, ear-training and other skills through enjoyable group participation. The system allows the child to discover, from his own experiences, how music is made.

The Yamaha class is an adventure for the parents as well. In the fun-filled atmosphere of a Yamaha class, the mother or father who attends with the child is able to share in the teacher's joy in the development which is taking place. More information on the Yamaha class may be obtained by calling 248-6543.
